Android launchers are one of the most useful apps for customization. It can entirely change the look of your home screen and how it behaves. Additionally, it can change things like icons and offer up a variety of other ways to theme and customize your device. Most Android launchers follow the AOSP launcher. You have home screens, you can add them to the right or left, and you have an app drawer. These days, a lot of newer launchers are going for the minimal aesthetic to put less noise between you and your productivity. We have a few of those here. Here are the best Android launchers available right now. The best Android launchers to make your home screen perfect Price: Free / Up to $9.99 AIO Launcher does it differently than many Android launcher apps. It does away with the standard home screen in favor of an information-packed list of stuff. It shows things like your latest SMS and missed calls, your media player, your system info (RAM, battery, storage, etc), and even stuff like news, Bitcoin price, Twitter, and more. The list is actually quite long and you can see the whole list in the Play Store description. The premium version also includes integration for Telegram and your regular widgets from other apps. Not everything has to look like stock Android and AIO Launcher certainly shows that it can be done effectively. Luckily, most of the features are free and the free version doesn't seem to have ads. Try these too: The best Android themes, theming apps, and customizations Apex Launcher has been around for a very long time and has undergone several facelifts during its lifetime. The current iteration has a fairly standard UI. You get home screens, an app drawer, and everything looks pretty typical. It does come with some extras that some folks might find useful. Apex comes with a built-in app locker to keep your kids out of your more sensitive apps. There are also themes, gesture controls, icon pack support, and some customization options like transition effects and more. The premium version isn't terribly expensive and you can donate to the developer if you want to. Most of the features are available in the free version and it doesn't have any ads. It's not perfect and it's a little vanilla. However, some people like vanilla and that's okay. Price: Free / Up to $5.99Before Launcher is one of a few minimal-style launchers on the list. This one claims to help reduce interactions with your phone by up to 40%. There is also a notification filter that reduces notifications by about 80%. Some other features include a clean, easy UI, and the ability to pin important apps or hide unimportant apps. It's a bit light on customizations, but that's pretty typical for minimal launchers. You do get support for icon packs, though. You get the vast majority of features on the free version which also doesn't contain advertisements. The developers also state that the app can't capture any data and requires no permissions to run. That's fairly standard for Android launchers on the list. It slots in nicely between heavier launchers like Nova Launcher and the stock Android experience of Lawnchair 2. The UI has a stock Android look and there are plenty of ways to customize it. You get the usual staples like icon pack support along with stuff like accent theming, other icon customizations, a font changer, a two-row dock, and more. It's pretty decent and also pretty cheap in terms of how it works and the features you get. It competes favorably with stuff like Lawncher Launcher 2 and other Pixel Launcher 5 tyle launchers. It's had a bit of a history with some bugs, but the developers do update it consistently. Launcher iOS 16 is the most popular iOS-inspired Android launcher. It does what you think it does. Your home screen, widgets, app groups, etc all look like they normally would on iOS. In addition, the launcher includes support for an iOS-style assistive touch (Google Play) and iOS-style assistive touch (Google Play) and iOS-style assistive touch (Google Play). was an add-free variant. You only see ads in the settings, but we don't like seeing ads at all. Lawncher is an excellent Android launcher for fans of minimalism. It's an open-source project that mimics much of the look and feel of the Pixel Launcher. It features many similar features to the Pixel Launcher along with a few others. Those features include icon pack support, Google Now integration (with an optional and free plugin), adaptive icons, and various other customizations. The developers now list the app as Lawnchair 2 and it's still in beta, but includes some more modern Android features. The app is also entirely free. Up next: The best weather apps and weather widgets for Android launcher used to be a fairly decent, minimal Android launcher used to be a fairly decent, minimal Android launcher used to be a fairly decent, minimal Android launcher. It has since grown into one of the most customizable Android launchers ever made. It's still super lightweight too. It gives you the ability to change virtually anything on the home screen. You can even have multiple sets of home screens for multiple occasions. Perhaps its most unique feature is its scripting support. You can use JavaScript to make Lightning do all kinds of stuff. There are also additional plugins, language packs, and more available for download. Lightning Launcher is, undoubtedly, the most customizable of any Android launcher. It just takes a little while to get used to it and there are a few bugs here and there. Unfortunately, this app hasn't seen an update it next. Microsoft Launcher isn't a new launcher. The app used to be Arrow Launcher. Microsoft re-branded the app in mid-2017. The app features integration with many Microsoft PCs. It also has customization features and gesture controls. This one returned to beta after the rebrand. Thus, there are likely some bugs for now. However, it's something different and especially useful for those who want better integration with their Windows PC. Microsoft is rebuilding this app from the ground up. That new version will likely replace this version with their windows PC. Microsoft is rebuilding this app from the ground up. That new version will likely replace this version on this list in the future when it's officially released. Niagara Launcher app on the list and it's kind of our diamond-in-therough pick. It features a very minimal UI with a clean look, excellent ergonomics, and a sleek look. The app also tries to limit your need for the notifications as well as music controls. There are some light theming options available along with basic stuff like icon pack support. The stable version launched in February of 2021 and included a bunch of bug fixes and some minor design changes. It's definitely and easily good enough to be here, especially if you want something different from the usual Android launcher experience. Read more: The best minimal apps for Android It doesn't get too much better than Nova Launcher. Like Apex Launcher, Nova has been around since the good old days. It remains not only relevant, but one of the best Android launcher app options available. It has a laundry list of customization features that include gesture support, the ability to customize the look and feel of the app, icon pack support, themes, and much, much more. The app also gets updated at a breakneck pace which means bugs generally get squished quickly and new features are added consistently. It also comes with the ability to backup and restore your home screen layouts for when you eventually switch to a new phone. It's the one we'd recommend you try first. Read more: The best icon packs for Android Olauncher is one of the newer Android launcher apps on this list. It boasts a minimal UI, fewer than average customizations, and distraction-free use. The app intentionally omits common graphical elements like icons in order to minimize the experience. You can set the wallpaper and do a few customizations, but that's kind of the idea. You install it, use it, and it doesn't get in the way. The app is newer and the developer is still adding new features. Still, this is one of the better minimal style launchers in recent memory. Poco Launcher is the stock launcher for the popular (and cheap) Pocophone. It's actually available for most Android devices and that's kind of surprising considering Google won't even release theirs. This is a fairly basic launcher. It has your basic stock Android-ish layout with icons on a home screen and a swipe-to-access app drawer if you want. Otherwise, it runs light and smooth. It's an easy recommendation for people with lower-end devices and those with higher-end devices who want something really simple. Also try: The best 4K and QHD wallpaper apps for Android look and feel with some additional customization elements to complete the look. Some of the features include icon pack support, and you can also get Google Feed working on this launcher, but like most, it requires an extra plug-in download and installation. The website with the instructions for that is in the Google Play description. This is right up there with Hyperion and Lawncher 5 is a vast difference from Smart Launcher 5. Thankfully, it's in a positive direction. It features a modern UI, ambient theming features, modern features like adaptive icons, and more. It even has a weather and clock widget and gesture controls. It's not quite as powerful as Nova Launcher or similar launchers and similar apps when it comes to customization and usability. Price: Free / Up to $5.00 Win-X Launcher is something a little bit different. It emulates a Windows PC UI with things like a start menu, folders on the desktop, windowed apps, and a taskbar. The app does still have Android features like notification badges, notification features, icon pack support, and keyboard and mouse support. It works best for devices with larger displays like tablets or foldable phones. You can use it on a regular phone, but it feels a bit cramped. There are other Windows-style launchers that just promote RAM boosting features and other nonsense. This one is legit. Android Launchers Best AppsGoogle Play Store
